

the patrons, many of whom were youths.

It is a sad reflection upon our social and business life to think that opportunities for employment and business are so restricted that girls must undergo practices which undermine their health, and that business men must make their appeal to the primitive instincts in order to gain patronage. Legitimate fields are overcrowded, both for employment and business; hence we have such exhibitions as these. There is a remedy, however. It consists in abolishing our present taxation system and collecting the annual rental value of land for governmental expenses, otherwise known as the single tax.—Anti-Poverty.

HANDSOME ST. BERNARD WINS LOVE OF LITTLE MISS "ROSEMARY" OF MEXICO

It is probably just a case of "puppy love," but the attachment of the biggest dog in the New York dog show for the smallest show dog is attracting the attention of dog show visitors.
